Benjamin Harrison came to huttan in 1864, at the sgs of 21. He came poor in purse but rich in resolution. No one ever heard him make reference to the names of his ancestors south of the life. He mounted the back of presperity without the aid of a stirrap. The hospitality of his ancestors had given their property—o those whom they had sorred; the full had gone to the people, the rind to themselves and family. On the arrival in the state he immediately entrad upon the practice of law, and at once arriboved success, Ampiltude of preparation, enlarged views of questions and the best knowledge of his profession. Stood Day a Session

At 10 o clock after devotional bervice there were presented stirring reports on the work of the American Baptist Public thon Society and on Religious Interature. In the di cussion which followed and which was participated in by Rev D. Heagit and others great emphasis was taid on the necessity for the circulation of pure, clean healthy literature for the masses. The Pacific hapital now being published semi monthly by Rev S. P. Days at Fast Port and in the interest of the Baptist denomination, is now in the twelfth year of its existence. For ten years it was published monthly under the au pices of the Oregon Hapital state convention. It was then entrasted to its present editor and proprietor, who immediately began its semi monthly issue. Now a strong effort is being made to enable him to make it an eight page five column wielly. The success attending these efforts indicate clearly that such a hapive result is to be reached and the effort under taken by next January. Hedges to the amount of $30c ish were made by delegates. VANCOUVER W T June 20

A laster from Alameda California an no inces the sudden death from heart dis-ent of Mr Hiram B Wheeler well known in Portland and for twelve years superintendent of lighthouse construction in the Thirteenth lighthouse district ter dent of lighthouse construction in the Thrites that lighthouse distruct.

To his old sesociates in the government respice and to his morely freeds (and we do not know that he had an enemy) the news comes laden with sadness. We recall his presence genual and kindly his consideration for all with whom he dealt, higher than all other traits—his stephing integraty and manifest and the scrapitous honesty with which all of his namy dunes great and triviat were discharged. His work was always well done and the large interests entrusted to him for along term of years the helelity of his service and the affectionate memory of his old friends are his best eulogy.

He leaves a son and daughter. The sympathics of his old friends are with them in their affliction.

... WINCIPAL DEFORMERS.

The Boston Transcript surcestically says that "the clergy should let judities alone, mid-comfine their energies to pulpit dogmand and the writing of testimonials for patient medicines." The New York Evening Post inquires:

of clearming who undortake the moral re-form of line community through politics, without the minit. As a rule the clerical ruther to an the puint. As a rule the ciercal reformer in politics does more harm than spool as harker. Dr. Bristopointed out in his suit hind, pury address delivered in the recent campalan. Why? Because as a rule the dogmant, drawler habit of the puint, where no body talks back to the critic, some or mile dogmant. work in the field of political reform. He is and to be creditions; he does not always remember that the phrase, who does not always repains a good deal of reported scandal in this world, he does not weigh, and traverse building, he has a pt to trust more to sweeping sensational speech and enotional appeal than to does he have the forget; that every stop forward in pence in the stricted of the sourie of forward in peace is the stride of the spurit of the best sourcen get rather than spurning everything short of the abstract good. The presidence of the beaute he is trained as a maker of sommer state rather than as a framer of statutes. To illustrate Burgingly, who deshed the cup from Bhinels lips in trying to help bine to victory, was an example of the presencess of a preacher to Burchard's habit of purpit speech betrayed him bate his blander; he reculded recent the num ento us blander; he couldn't resist the temptation to shoot ap errow at the Great Red Bragon of Rome, and as a result he missed the dragon and astical his analidate, to the past. Just so in the discussion of sometimes on the friends of temperance and sometimes on its foes, and the result is that there, is, a general desire between both good, men and bad to kill the good men and bed to kill the crary elephant. Suppose a francowned a fine blooded Durling Anti- and was also the proprietor of white and value ble crockery store. As a stock fancier he would admire that buil, but it some fine would admire that but, but it some in-morning the bult broke longs from his field and charged into the creekery store the pro-prietor, remembering that, "China thy paine is fruit;" would be glad to shoot his bull and sare his shop.

The incapacity of a cherical retiriner to see that in all matters of reform in municipal or phytract best and the best you can get is the more remarkable, because every preacher's church is supported by the co-operation of both saints and sinners. The number of Christian churches would be few in the land to-day it nobody but the cleat contributed directly or indirectly to their support. The number of substant laws on the statute book that make something for social and civio peace and order would be small, if nobody total for an austrined those laws except these who could show a clear bill of moral health. No proacher can afford to forget when he talks to his powe that earners as well as saints pay by the paws, cherish the church and support the minister. He does not forget it ordinatily, because he knows that if he does forget it he is more likely to become a carmi eval half tiliur a settled minister, but when he steps down from his pulpit to play moral reformer in politics he ioes seem to forget that the co-operation of all elements of the body politic are necessary to success; that company to leave the best and the best new the part at the propriet in pends. The malberred such who land tendporate lives and favor temperance are many and influential: the number of are mainy and influential; the number of men who are prohibitionists are few and not influential, and therefore to inset on prohibition, which the profess as public opinion with not have is to organize failure and design defeat. The number of people who play spade, and yet who are not professional gamblers and are willing and anxious to thate "gradhing bouses, are many and influential, and the number of those who think it as in to play earls at all are few and non-influential, so that a cruede against cards, or saloons where cards are played is not ducty to get very influential support, but to close the open doors of gambling houses would not be difficult.
The number of men who lead pure dome-tic lives are many and induential, and yet the number of men who believe that the social evil can be suddenly stamped out or extirnoted by law are few and non-influential, so that in most sides the community is content with the largest amount of outward peace, order, decency and clembiness they can get under law, wasting to the preachers, teachers and other spiritual influences to persuade had other spiritual induction to persuant their fellow-men to turn their eyes on the heavens above rather than on the flesh puts of Egypt at their fret. So with the executives of government. They cannot all be saints, because saints cannot always nor offen he elected to office, and even when they are elected they are elected they are sometimes grossly inefficient. Some men who mean well and personally behave well govern wretchedly, while some men who do not always lean to virtue's circle always govern well; that is they do their public duty efficiently and up-rightly under law. Benjamin' Franklin was the father of an illegitimate child, but that was not regarded by the continental con-gress as a sufficient reason why he should not as a putriot and a stateman represent the struggling colonies before the Bridsh parliament and at the court of France. He-cause a man is not calculated to be at the head of a female seminary is no reason why he should be denied many other pinces of important public usefulness and trust. The saluts and the sinners who make up society the quadries of a partison leader than of a great spaces. Longstreet essent that his failure to execute See. Lee's orders and force theorousing of White Onk creek on the, 30th of June, 1850; lost Lee the battle of Giouale and smoot Modellink's army. That day 30.—000 Contederate soldlers were "strock" at the crussing of White Oak creek, unable to fire a shot that could help Longstreet and Lillinghing disperately a few miles off. Longstreet's indegment to that Jackson's whole movement indirect type was from a military standpoint a gross error; from the consequences of which he was only saved by a spacession of hisppy accidents, the extraordinary failbisppy accidents, the extraordinary the of McCiellan's army to relatore forcing a junction with McCiellan instead of halting to fight a neodless battle at great disadvuntings of position Gen. Couch's sketch of the Chancallors-ville campaign in the light mumber of "Battles and Leaders of Civil Wur," tells the story afresh of Jackson's march neross the fro of Hooker santreuched position with 22,000 men and his dispersion of the Eloventh corps under Research which formed Hooker's right tiank. It was about 5:50 in the evening of May 2 when the head of Jackson's column found fixed on the right and deared Hooter's army. For, a time Jackson's attack created great confusion, but the resistance of Berry's division of the Third corps and the promptness and skill with which Gen. Iteaanton concentrated the fire of twenty-two pieces of artillery upon the head of Jackson's column not only repulsed, the enemy and inflicted very severe loss but brought bim to a stand in a position that would have exposed him to destruction hart Hooter's brains not become paraltried by the sudden dispager to the Hank. It was about 5:50 in the eveniug come paralyzed by the spidien disaster to the Elevent curps. For half an hone Lackson had the army of the Petonuc at his mercy, but he halted to reform his troops in the woods instead of pushing mend into the clearing where he could have rapidly reformed his troops and where he could have seen that he was master of the situation. When he advanced upon Pleasanton's twenty-two guns, had his infantry twanty-two gams, had his infantr been directed to fire tow he would have di abled the extenoneers at the guns, carried the position, cut off two divisions of the Third carps and rolled up the Second and Twelfth corps like a scroll. Jackson, in fact, hafted just when he had victory in his grasp. As: was, he did not inflict serious loss upon our army, for the Eleventh corps run away rapidly, which was the best thing they could do. because, caught in a false position, res would have been impossible. Inckson's losses were more squere on this day than our own, and on the next morning, May 3, Gen. couch says that "the stuation of Inckson's corps says that "the striction of liceson's copy was a desperate one, its front and right flank being in the presence of not far from 25,000 mgn, will the left flank subject to the assault of 30,000, the spinulid corps of Meade and Reynolds. It only required that Hooker should bruce himself up to take a reasonable ommon sense view of the state of thin have turned the success of Jackson into an overwhelming defeat." But Hooker became overwhelming deteat." But Hoose became very despendent. He had fine administrative qualities as an officer, but lacked weight of character and moral courage to act with vigor and resolution under the weight of actual responsibilities. Ho was an able quartermaster and inspectorgeneral! The dispatches of Lee to Gen. Minutes are traded by Pleasanton, prove that Laws, captured by Pleasanton, prove that Hooker really surprised Lee by the brilliant-by condition and executed movement of his army to Chancellorsville, thus taking in reverse, the entire system of the enemy's river defenses and communding roads leading di-rectly upon the enemy's communications. cala those advantages. Hooker ha vided his army into two wings. The line of communication between his right at Chan-cellar-ville and his left, under Sedgwick and Gibbon, before Fredricksburg, was twenty miles long, and Hooker's first duty was to have sheltered this line by seizing Banks? Ford, and thus place his wings within easy support of each other. May I., when within reach of success, Hooker lost hearr and heaf unaccountably, became vasilisting and in-decisive, and withdrew to Chancellorsville, abandoning high, open ground, and losing the prize of Banks! ford and the chance to bring his right wing willin reloser support of Sedgwick. Hooker, without a light, abandoned, on May I, the eptendic latitative he had so brilliantly gained by his surprise of Lee, and put himself on the defensive without the slightest excuse for his surrender of the offensive. The last words that Bincoln said to Hooker were "He sure and out in all your men." unibecountably, became vaciliating and in were, "Re sure and put in all your nea," which was exactly what Hooker did not do.

Up to the evening of May 2, when Jackson was shot by his own men, the enemy had suffered severely, while the Army of the Potomic had fost but comparatively few men; but the next day Gon J. E. B. Stuart sow his advantage when Hooker exacuated fluxel frove, the position that Jackson had fatied to capture the evening before. He planted his urtillery upon this important ground and gaunded our army, but even, then ground and againded our army, but even, then Hooker had two corps; 30,000 sixons, that he could have fluing upon the enemy, but he would not; though Meade and Beynnids begged him to do so. Couch says Hooker was not intoxicated; that he abstained from his usual simulant, when probably the sudden cessation burt him more than it helped him. He was abstained to support the sudden cessation burt him more than it helped him. He was abstained to support support the sudden to the large which the support support support the subhim. He was physically a man of splendid courage, but he seems to have been destitute of moral courage; he was easily elated and easily depressed; he seems to have became despondent, inert, incapable of mental or bodily exertion under the stress of excessive responsibility. After his brilling strategy and rapid marching had surprised Leo he suddenly became frightened at the and from the Grounds, 52 Cents. the shadows of his own success and threw away his battle when he had won 30 points out of 160 in the most difficult part of the game of war.

It is clear therefore that Jackson did not win Chancelbraville, for his attack failed. The hero of the battle was Gen. Stuart, who succeeded him, aided by the extraordinary. and finaccountable conduct of Hooker Jackson's previous victories were won over such men as Banks, Shields, Francont and Sigel. He never was pitted against an able soldier like Shoridan, Medde or Humphreys. In our judgment be was not an abler cap-tain than Gen. Early; indeed, he never did anything so brilliant against a good soldier as Early did against Wright, when he surprised and defeated him at Cedar Creek.

The associated press is not turnishing as good a report of the republican convention at Chicago as it furnished of the democratic convention at St. Louis. The report from Chicago, compared with the other, is not well "worked" at all. It is lean, scattering, disconnected and unsubstantial, and resembles the work of "green hands."

The late superor of Germany in August, 1870, defeated MacMahon at Weissenbourg defented the united army corps of MacMa-hon, Canrobert, and Failly at Woerth, de-feated MacMahon at Sedan September 7, and began the siege of Paris September 20, 1870.

R. C. Warner had a trial before Justice Bushwilet and a jury resterday, afternoon on a charge of ornelly it animals. The ovidence adduced disclosed that Tucsday he left a horse standing on First street, near Alder, for seven, hours, during which time there was a beavy rain. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and Warner was fined $20.

In the cases of Luigi Lugardi, Jos. Aracia and Tars: Angelo, arrested on election day, the grand jury 'yesterday returned 'not a true bill' in each case, and Judge Deady ordered the men discharged. On six indoctments the grand jury 'returned true bills and bench warrants were ordered issued for three of the persons indicked, their bail being fixed at $1000 cach.

"Frequently. I remember a very exciting scene at one of her earlier receptions. Ostrich plumes, waving high over the head, formed a part of the evening head-dress of a fashionable belle at that time. Miss McEvers, sister of Mrs. Edward Livingston, who was present, had plumes unusually high. The coiling of the drawingroun of the president's house, near Franklin square, was rather low, and Miss McEvers' plumes were ignited by the flume of the chandelier. THE PIERREPONT DIAMONDS

By E. M. Glimer.

Corporated 1888 by the Author. | Our one of the dark and marrow streets in the French quarter of New Orleans, rising tall and grim from the banquette, is the Pierrepont mansion. Balconies of ex-quisite hand-wrought iron hang from the upper stories; but the yellow stucco is falling from the walls of the house, and time and decay have laid their insidious hands upon it. It is a strangely dreary-looking nouse; no vines even trail over the balconies, no childish face ever peeps from the jealously-barred windows; the heavy street loor, with its beautiful iron scroll and araes sunken deep into the wood, rarely opens save to the priest, or some rote the neighboring convent of Our Lady of Succor.

No one lives in the big, rambling manmon with its score of rooms, but old Madame Pierrepont and her servant, Babbette, ame Pierrepont and her servast, Babbette, and as for them—

"Mat foil" exclaimed my garmlous little Creole landlady, "they would be more amusing if they were dead. No visitors, no fetes; no anything. It is just sitting waiting, waiting, day after day, and for what?" She finished the sentence with a shring; and a comprehensive gesture that took in every human possibility.

If was quite by accident I was enabled to show Madame Pierrecont some little courtesy, and after that I penetrated easily enough into the dim old house that was always a standing challenge to my curiosity. Many an evening of the long, sweet spring days I have sat on the balcony with the genific little old Creole lady, herself as fragile and delicate as a bit of her old severes chins, listening unweariedly to her talk, of the past, for madame belonged to the old regime and life ended for her when the old regime and life ended for her when her only son fell at Manassas, and the big plantations and the riches that had once plantanons and the riches that that the been here were swept away by the war that left her poor and childless. From the gallery, where we oftenest sat, we could see the bishop's garden, gay with flowers, behind the old cathedral, and now and then tween the breaks in the lines of the uses, the masts of the ships anchored in criver showed sharpty silhouetted against

Here old Babbette would bring madame There old bapotte would bring maname her glass of can sucre, and we would sit silently together as friends may, or quite naturally as if there could be nothing so interesting in the world. She would begin speaking of the great sugar plantation on the Teche where she was born, and grew to womanhood and married. I think that to womanhood and married. I think that even after three score years of city life, she was still homesick for the waving cane fie ds and the country.

"Ah," she would say with a sigh, "there was the mansion touse with the negro quarters, like a village, my friend, and the little chapal where the priest confessed one, and just beyond, under the live cale, the little cemetery with its tombs like so many little inarble houses. The 'tomb familie Pierrepont' like it had been for years! Ah, I remember how the roses and less and he wind blew over it. One would not mind dying so if only one might rest there," and and line would cross herbeil sadly thinking perhaps how soon she must be laid in some

m. dome would cross herself sadly thinking perhaps how soon she must be laid in some qu'et city of the dead.

One evening when we had been very qu'et for a long time, and madome had been speaking more than usual of the past, she suddenly unfastened a diamond brooch from her throat and handed it to me for isney formed a center about which were et smaller stones intloops that formed a

"They are some of the Fierrepont diamonds," she said, in answer to my look of inquiry.

Presently she stretched forth her withered old hand and took the brooch, and holding it now so it caught the light and disshed it back in dazzling rays, now so there was only a dull red glow in the diamonds, flery hearts, she told me their history. Sometimes she spoke in broken English, sometimes she spoke in broken English, sometimes she spoke of the old plantation life she used the soft, sweet patois of the Creole negroes.

Many years ago, she said, when her grandfather brought his beautiful young bride to the great sugar plantation on the Teche, he gave her, among other wedding gits, a superb set of diamonds, every piece of which bore the same design—twin stones, he and she, one might fancy, bound together in a true lover's knot. Ah, but they were happy, those two, on the great rich plantation; children were born to them and the bright years, scarce counted, a speed by until, coming suddenly as a storm in summer, death chilmed the gay young husband, and the tomb of the "faraille Fierrepont" in the little cemetery behind the chapel was unsealed to admit another tenarat.

After that, time dragged itself along to another tenent.

After that, time dragged itself along to the wife whose heart was buried in her husband's grave, and she lived only in the memory of the time when he and she had been together. Perhaps her mind became unsettled from too, long brooding on one subject, perhaps the angels of the good God sent her comfort so, who knows? But she came to believe that her husband was switing for her just beyond the cates of sane came to believe that her husband was waiting for her just beyond the gates of death, not old, as she had grown, but in the beauty and freshness of eternal youth, and it was her lancy to go to him when the died, decked as she had been as a finde. She would touch the white satin of her wedding gown with caressing fingers, and hold the diamonds against her with ered cheeks.

Ah, but he will welcome me, mine Al-"Ah, but he will welcome me, mine arphones," she would say with a smile.

Finally the idea that she had changed in all the years since his death, so he might not know her save by his gifts, took posees mine of her and became a terror not to be all the was dead.

Suppose after the was dead. thrown off. Suppose after she was dead thry should refuse her this piliful handful the fiches she was loaving! What it sold fall to know her and she should miss the husband she had so loved in that strange world? The thought haunted her like a formenting spirit, and on almost the last day before she died she took her two with days for the like there and on their last day before also died she took her two sons down to the little chapel, and on their knees before the image of the holy Mother of Serrows made them swear upon the crucifix to fulfill her last wish. So when she was delt they put on her once more wedding gown, and fastened in the snow white hair the tima of finshing diamonds that had gleamed there when it was black as night. On breast and throat and wrist they had put the jewels, as she had worn them on her bridd day, and then the coffin lid was scrawed down and the "Tomb familla Pierrionit' received, still another lid was screwed down and the "Tomb

There were only a few who knew that a fortune in diamonds was buried in old Madame Pierrepont's grave, and by and by it was half forgotten. The sons married and drifted into the vortex of city life. ried and drifted into the vortex of city life, returning to the old home only for a few weeks during the sugar grading season, and in course of time the estate passed into the hands of a new generation who knew nothing of the buried lewels says as a hulf-bolieved family legend, that the old negroes told with bated breath."

Madame paused for a long time. The noise of the city floated up to us on the balcony. Somebody was going along the street humming an air from Norma.

"Among those who knew of the buriel of the dismonds in the tomb," she said after

"Among those who know of the burner of the diamond's in the tomb," she said after a while, "was the son of an old neighbor on the Tache, named Francois, who, like the Pierrepionte, dirifted into New Orleans. He had not been fortunate. He had seen his plantition near hy area. He had not been fortunate. He had seen his plantation, acre by acre, pass into the hands of the commission agent, until at last there was nothing left, and he came to the city to seek his fiving, poor, bewildered, duzed. He had always been fond of books—too fond, said his neighbors, who were only learned in vacuum pans and centrifugals—so some wind of chance blew him into a little second-hand brook stars, where he was his wind of chance blew him into a little sec-ond-hand book store, where he was his own best patron, and grew grayer and dryer and dustier day by day over the musty old books. He had brought with him from the country only one piece of sanshine—his daughter Celeste, who blos-somed out in the dingy little shop like a splendid japonica in an earthen jar, and around her he wreathed all the love and tenderices that he might have given, untenderness that he might have given, under happier auspices, to wife and child and tenderness that he might have given, under happier auspices, to wife and child and home.

Madame ceased speaking for an instant, and then she said abruptly, "Mon ami, the wisest of us do not know how such things happen. It is in the hands of le bon bleu, I say, and I should know, for I married the man I loved; but one day there happened into the shop a fine Misieu young and handsoins, and gay, a good parti for any one: And what will be have? Is it Lamartine or Its Fontaine he will have? He see Celeste and he forgets everything. It is as if he had been seeking her all his life. Mar foi, it is love! And Celeste? Ah! there are no young demoiselles like her now. She was enough to make any man forget when once he had seen her eyes. Eh bien, as was saving, the handsome mister was arranced. Every day he finds his way to the shop, until at last it happens as one inight suppose, and he wishes to marry Celeste. Very well. But it happens also might suppose, and he wishes to marry celeste. Very well. But it happens also have sour heart of the real without a dot! In vain is it represented to her that Francois is of the Huguenots, that he has met with missortune. She will not listen. Francois is of despair. It will that Francois is of the Huguenots, that he has met with misiortune. She will not listen. Francois is in despair. It will break Celeste's heart. Day by day he sees her grow thinner, and the color fade out of her check. It is more than he can stand. "Do not despair, my child," he cried one day, bidding her adieu. "Le bon Dieu will provide."

That night he started on a journey back to the old home. I could funcy how every familiar landmark must have smote him like a blow, and called out to 'him that he familiar landmark must have smote him like a blow, and called out to 'him that he was going back to dishouer. He knew that within the old Pierrepont tomb in the lonely churchyard was hidden the wealth that would buy Caleste happiness and life, and what sin was it if he reached out his hands and fook it? It was treasure going to wisete; at best, there in the crumbling gid tomb, where the grass struck its roots themselves and the grass struck its roots deep in the creation between the bricks. The must obtay on an and her foolish whim were already half forgotten. No one came to the tomb to pray of weep; even on All were already half forgotten. No one came to the tomb to pray of weep; evon on All Soulis duy 10 one brought here an immortalle. West, if he robbed, it was nothing but a hindfull of unknowing dust, and as for the Tierrepont's what did a lew jewels more or less matter to them? While as forcelesse—Al. God! he would sell his soul for her. He loyed her better than his linear. We the was happy nothing else mattered.—

The blood beat and surged through his-brain, balls of fire flashed before his eyes. He was conscious people looked strangely at him, and once when a kindly hand was laid upon his shoulder he shook it roughly off.

In a few days Francois was back in the In a few days Francois was tack in the city in the musty little shop. He sent for M'sieu and his mother, and the three went to the notary where the marriage contract was signed, and he settled, oh, quite a fortune on Celeste. But the money, where did he get it, they asked. "Bah," he said, "one lays saide something for the evil day," passing it off as a jest, so. Well, nothing would do but the marriage must take place the next day. "Celeste had no trousseau!" She might buy it afterwards. He had important affairs shroad, and must be gone.

She might buy it atterwards. He had important affairs shroad, and must be gone.

Bien, it is as I tell you. The next day they were married, Celoste and her fine M'sieu, and they passed out of the church smiling, happy. Francois kisses Celeste solemnly, and then he slipped back in the church and knelt before the altar of our Blessed Lady. He did not see or heed the records will about people all about.

"Oh, thou, who knowest what it is to bear and love a child, intercede for me," he cried, and he fell dead there at the foot of the altar of the altar.

The next day there came a message from the plantation saying the Pierrepont tomb had been descented and robbed. There was no difficulty in tracing the theft to was no difficulty in tracing the theft to Francois, or in recovering the diamonds which had been sold to a jeweler in the city. The affair was hushed up, and of course the jewels came back to the Pierreport family. After all, such things are in the hands of le bon Dieu. But what would you? Celeste got her lover and I got these p'baubles. Ah, none of usknow another's temptation to sin, my friend. As for me, I had a mass said for the repose of poor Francois' soul."

The night was growing chilly and madame rose to go within.

"In revoir," she said, giving me her hand in farewell, and I stooped and kissed the fingers on which the Pierrepoint diamonds were gleaming, in the moonlight.

of the Albany patroon, Stephen van Rensseler.

In the spring of 1780 Miss Schuyler accompanied her parents to the headquarters of the continental army at Morristown, N. J., where they tarried several weeks. She attracted much attention. There Colonel Hamilton, Washington's accomplished secretary, enamored by her charms, woodd and won her, and they were married at Albany in December, the same year. From that time she was one of the most beloved and cherished-friends of Mrs. Washington, until the death of the latter, twenty years afterward. Their mutual attachment seemed like that of mother and daughter.

Mrs. Hamilton was deeply affected by the deathse of her distinguished friend. Two years later, she was compelled to endure a far greater bereavement in the sudden death of both lumband, at the age of 47.

For fifty years afterward she lived a widow, dving at the home of her only daughter, Mrs. Holly, in Washington City. In a large pocket-book which she carried about her person was found the letter written to her by her husband on the morning of his departure for the fatal field. It was much discolored by her tears. She had carried it in her bosom for half a century.

THE LAST RELLE OF THE REVOLUTION.

I was in Washington at the close of 1848, and enjoyed the privilege of passing my first evening there with the venerable widow of Gen. Hamilton. She was then in the 92d year of her age, and showing few symptoms, in person or mind, of extreme longevity. The sunny cheerfulness of her temper and quiet humor, which had shed their blessed influences around her all through life, still made her deportment genial and attractive. Her memory, faithful to the myriad impressions of a long and eventful experience, was ever ready with eventul experience, was ever ready with its various reminiscences to give a poculiar charm to her conversation on subjects of the buried past. She was the last living belle of the revolution, and possibly the last survivor of the notable women who gave a charin to the republican court at New York and Philadelphia during Wash-

New York and Philadelphia during Washington's administration.

When I revealed to Mrs. Hamilton the object of my visit, her dark eyes beamed with pleasurable emotion. She seated herself in an easy chair near me, and we talked without ceasing upon the interesting theme until invited by her daughter to the tea-table, at 8 o'clock, when we were cived by a Franch lady gifter to the years. joined by a French lady, eight or ten years the junior of Madam Hamilton.

Our conversation began abruptly.
"I have lately visited Judge Ford at Morristown," I remarked.
"Judge Ford, Judge Ford," she repeated, musingly. "Oh, I remember now. He called on me a few years ago and brought to my recollection many little events which occurred while I was at Morristown with my, father and mother during the war and which I had forwatter. I remember him. which I had forgotten. I remember him as a bright boy, much thought of by Mr. Hamilton, who was then Washington's secretary. He brought to mama and me from Mrs. Washington an invitation to headquarters soon after our arrival at Mor-

"Had you ever seen Mrs. Washington before?" I inquired.
"Never. She received us so kindly, kissing us both, for the general and papa were very warm friends. She was then almost 50 years old, but was still handsome. She was quite short; a plump little woman with dark brown eyes, her hair a little frosty, and very plainly dressed for such a grand lady as I considered her. She wore a plain, brown gown of homespun such a grand addy as I considered her. She wore a plain, brown gown of homespun stuff, a large, white neckerchief, a neat cap, and her plain gold wedding ring, which she had worn more than twenty years. Her graces and cheerful manner delighted us. She was always my ideal of a true woman. Her thoughts were then much on the poor soldiers fered during

"Were you much at headquarters afterward?" I inquired.
"Only a short time the next winter and an occasional visit," she replied. "We went to Now Windsor after we were mar-ried, and there a few weeks afterward Mr. Hamilton left the General's military family. I made my home with my parents at Albany, while my husband remained in the army until after the surrender of Cornwallis. I visited Mrs. Washington at head-quarters at Newburg, on her invitation, in the summer of 1782, when I remember she quarters at Newburg, on her invitation, in the summer of 1782, when I remember she had a beautiful flower garden planted and cultivated by her own hands. It was a lovely spot. The residence was an old stone house standing on the high bank of the river and overlooking a beautiful bay and the lofty highlands beyond. We were taken from Newburg in a barge to the headquarters of the French army, a little beyond Peekskill, where we were cordially received by the Viscount de Noailles, a kinsman of Madame Lafayette, who was Mr. Hamilton's warm friend. We re-remained there several days and were witnesses of the excellent discipline of the French troops. There we saw the brave young Irisk woman called 'Captain Molly,' whom I had seen two or three times before. She seefned to be a sort of a pet of the French." fore. She see the French." CAPTAIN MOLLY.

"Who was 'Captain Molly,' and for what was she famous?" I asked. "Why don't you remember reading of her exploit at the battle of Monmouth?" her exploit at the battle of Monmonth? She was the was the wife of a cannonier—a stout, red-haired, freekle-faced young Irish woman named Mary. While her husband was managing one of the field pieces in that action, she constantly brought water from a spring near by. A shot from the British killed him at his post, and the officers in command having no one connects. cers in command, having no one compe-tent to fill his place, ordered the piece to be withdrawn. Molly (as she was called) be withdrawn. Molly (as she was called; saw her bushand fall as she came from the saw her busband fall as stee came from the spring, and so beard the order. She dropped her bucket, seized the rammer, and vowed that she would fill the place of her husband at the gun and avenge his death. She performed the duty with great skill, and won the admiration of all who saw her. My husband told me that she was brought in by General Greene the rext morning, her dress soiled told me that she was brought in by General Greene the next morning, her dress soiled with blood and dust, and presented to Washington as worthy of reward. The general, admiring her courage, gave her the commission of a sergeant and on his recommendation her name was placed on the list of half-pay officers for life. She was living near Fort Montgomery in the highlands at the time of our visit and came to the camp two or three times waile we were there. She was dressed in a sergeant's coat and waistont over her pettocat, and a cocked hat. The stery of her exploit charmed the French officers, and they made her many presents. She would sometimes pass along the French lines when on parade and get her hat nearly filled with crowns."

"You must have seen and become acquainted with very many of the most distinguished men and women of America, and also eminent freeigners, which your husband was in Washington's cabinet," I remarked.

PORTLAND, Or., June 11.—It is now but five years since the first railroad was completed which gave Portland a direct comnunication with the rest of the United States: But within that short time it has become the grantest railroad conter not alone remarked.

"Oh, yes," she replied.

"I had ittle of private life in those days. Mrs. Washington, who, like myself, had a passionate love of home and domestic life, often complained of the 'waste of time' she was complained to the 'waste of time'. come the greatest pairond center, not alone in the Northwest, but west of the Rocky in the Northwest, but west of the Rocky mountains. Besides local lines, it is the actual western terminus of the Southern. Union and Northern Pacific systems, and is the point of destination and departure of difplanea of the 'waste of time' she was compelled to endure. 'They call me the First Lady of the Land, and think I must be extremely happy,' she would say, almost bitterly at times, and add: 'They might more properly call me the Chief State Prisoner'. trains of all completed cairoads, not purely local, in the Northwest, as it is the end of the roads. But, though Portland, in so short a time, has risen to such a commandshort a time, has risen to such a command-ing position as a railroad center, it is not to the railroads, or their influence, hat the citmowes its position as the metropolis of the great Northwest, and which is nearly double in extent the New England and Mil-dle states combined. Before the railroads were, Portland was just what it is now in its relations to the country at large, and they Prisoner.

"As I was younger than she I mingled more in the gayettee of the day. I was fond of dancing, and usually attended the public bulls that were given. I was at the Inauguration bull—the most brilliant of them all uration ball—the most brilliant of them all—which was given early in May at the Assembly rooms on Broadway, above Wall street. It was attended by the president and vice-president, the cabinet officers, a majority of the members of the congress, the French and Spanish ministers, and military and civil officers, with their wives and daughters. Mrs. Washington had not yet arrived in New York from Mount Vegnon, and did not until three weeks later. On that occasion every woman who atrelations to the country at large, and they relations to the country at large, and the have contributed to the growth and pro-perity of the city, only by increased facilities for transportation, and these facilities have caused a more rapid settlement of the country. The railroads were built to and now center at Portland, for the same reason that try. The railroads were built to and now center at Portland, for the same reason that the trade and commerce of the country contered here before the railroads were built, and the cause for both is in the general by of the country, and, as this cause cannot be removed, the conditions which make Portland the great trade center and metropolis of the Northwest must remain as constant for all future time as they have been in the past. On that occasion every woman who attended the ball was presented with a fin, prepared in Paris, with ivory frame, and when opened displayed a likeness of Washington in profile." ington in profile."

WASHINGTON'S DANCING.

"Were you often at balls which Washington attended?" I inquired.

"Frequently."

Thid he usually dance on such occasions?" BETWEEN TWO MOUNTAIN RANGES.

To the south of the Columbia river the To the south of the Columbia fiver the country is traversed north and south by two great ranges of mountains. On the coast, extending from California to the Columbia and northward, is the Coast range having an elevation of about 4000 feet, and about seventy-five miles to the custward of this is the Cascade range, having an elevation of about 8000 feet, with some few passes as low as 5000. Between these two ranges is a stretch of exceedingly fertile land, in extent about double the size of Massachusetts. This section could reach the sea by-crossing the Coast mountains at heavy mountain grades, but along this entire coast is no harbor admitting other than light-draught coasting vessels, until the Columbia is reached, and it is compelled to seek to outlet at Portland, where it reaches by rai, at average water-level grades, by following the course of the Willamette river to Portland, at its mouth. The country south of the Columbia and east of the Cascade mountains an elevation of about 4000 feet, and about age water-level grades, by following the course of the Williamette river to Portland, at its mouth. The country south of the Columbia and east of the Cascade mountains can reach or be reached from the sea at a port admitting vessels of all classes at average water level grades, only by the pass of the Columbia and by way of Portland, which is just at the mouth of this pass, or, at heavy mountain grades, by crossing the Cascade and Coast ranges, and going northward to Portland, which is just at the mouth of this valley. To the north of the Columb a, Puget sound makes in to the east of the Coast range. The country around the Sound is mountainous in character, and althost entirely without agricultural land, though exceedingly rich in its resources of coal and timber. This country naturally seeks an outlet via the waters of the Sound. The country to the north and east of the Columbia and east of the Coscade mountains can reach or he reached from the sea by way of Puget sound by crossing the Cascade mountains and tow grades save by the pass of the Columbia and by way of Portland.

FORTLAND'S GREAT ADVANTAGE.

The more the subject is studied in detail-the more prominently the advantages of the position of Portland stand out. North of San Finneisco and within the boundary of the United states, there are but two places San Finneisco, and winth the boundary of the United states, there are but two places admitting sca-going vessels of all classes, the Columbia river and Puget sound, both of which are navigable for a sufficient extent to admit of the establishment of i unerous towns and cities along their shores. The showing made, taking the distance from the tables given by the different railroads as for their own lines, is: For all country reached by the Northern Pacific and its branches, which includes Eastern Washington territory, Northern Idaho and Western Montana, the distance by rail to Portland is thirty-one mites less than to the nearest available seaport on Puget sound. For the country in the big bend of the Snake river and middle Idaho, the distance by rail to Portland is sixty-four miles less than to the nearest available port on Puget sound. From all country on the line of the Oregon Short line, which includes Northwestern Oregon and Southern Idaho, the distance by rail to Portland is ninery miles less than the nearest available port on Puget sound. But not alone is the distance by rail in favor of nearest available port on Puget sound. But not alone is the distance by rail in favor of Portland, as from all this country, from the Portland, as from all this country, from the point of divergence in each case, the grade is water level to Portland as against heavy mountain grades to any other soaport, and Portland is ninety-seven miles nearer the sea than the nearest other available seaport. From that section watered by the Deschutes and John Day rivers and their tributaries, and from all Western Oregon, the shortest route to any of the ports of Puget sound is through Portland, with 145 miles in distance by rail in favor of Portland, and, ninety-seven miles as in the distance to the sea from the nort. from the port.

SOMETRING MORE. But Portland is not duly the present center of railroad transportation, but has been for years and is now the center of the only lines of interior transportation in the Northwest. The only navigable rivers in the entire Northwest are the Columbia and its tributaries. The Columbia, with two short portages, with its tributary, the Snake, is navigable, and has for years been navigated, as far up as Idabo, and was for years the only means of transportation the country only means of transportation the country east of the Cascade mountains had. The Willamette river is navigable well up to the head of the valley, and regular lines of steamboats have been for years, and are now, plying upon its waters. Some of the tributaries on the north side, extending northward into Washington territory, are navigable for small river steamers. All these lines of transportation meet at Portland, and are met here by the deepsee lines in the lines of transportation as metropolis of the Northwest, before the building of the railroads, and while it may be adopted that these water-ways do not do away with the necessity for railroads, to the full and complete development of the country, yet, it is a law of trade which can be no more ignored with safety than the laws of health or the statute laws of a well-governed state, that water competition will steam of the country yet, it is a with safety than the laws of health or the statute laws of a well-governed state, that water competition will always decide the point of distribution, and therefore will compel the focusing at such point of railway lines. As the navigable waters of the Pacific Northwest converge at Portland, so the railrouds as far as yet constructed, following natural grades, have centered at the same place. Whenever the arteries of trade, whether wagon-road, rail or canal, have met a navigable body of water there in time has grown up a city. Buffulo Bill makes a sensation as he walks up Broadway every afternoon. His trip to England has given him additional standing here, and with the masses he is a popular idol. The average street boy will follow his long, curling lecks, and white sombrero for blocks.

RIVER AND BAR CHANGES. PORTLAND, Or., June 21, 1888.

PORTLIND, Or., June 21, 1889.

TO THE ENTOR OF THE ORRIGORIES.

Seeing the announcement in this morning's edition that the Oregon Pailway & Navigation Company has fixed a schedule of rates for towage on river and but which is pronounced to be "eminently satisfactory to the resident managers of the largest shipping houses," I would nevertheless like to ask if this is in consonance with the pledge of the railroud owners made to the visiting committee in New York, who reported to the board of trade that the promise was readily given that rates would be extablished which would put shipments ox the Columbia river one par with those from Puzet sound. If the schedule proposed if deerned one to meet that exigency it will doubtless be approved by the "resident managers" much more heartily than it will by resident erty owners of this city.

It is, in factural effect, a tax on this extent to count a river of at least if percent in the county and handicage. Portion to that extent in the rivalry that is to ensure for the grain shipments of Battern Orman and Washington territory.

The Oregon Railway a Navigation Company, always noted for their want of farment and ordinary discretion, not move themselves, have permitted the Northers Pacific railroad to cut the heart of the grain producing sections of Umatilla county in Oregon, and of the Eureka Flat county in Walla Walla county. W. T., so that at least 60,000 tons of grain from those two sections hitherto tribute to the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, are now irretrievally lost to us, as even with equal-freight raise to the ocean the farmers will not haul from the two roads, and with the advantage of cost to the seaboard, it is plain to be seen what the outcome will be.

Besides these sections, absolutely their own the two roads, and with the advantage of cost to the seaboard, it is plain to be seen what the outcome will be.

Besides all this there are 60,000 to 80,000 tons of freight which will be similiarly affected this year in the Palouse country. Of course the only outcome to this is, that the O. R. & N. will be driven to do what in common sense they should do now, not waiting as they usually have done sofar, to be forest by necessity to do. Unless they want to forego the carrying trade of those Sections east of the mountains, which have the advantage of rival roads, they must do just what they promised the visiting committee. Failure to do it will lose them and Portland at least 100,000 tons of grain shipment the coming season.

If Mr. Adams promised the visiting committee, our board of trade should empha-at least 100,000 tons of grain shipment the coming season.

If Mr. Adams promised this to the visiting committe, our board of trade should emphasize the request that it be fulfilled. If the management declines to do so they will eventually be driven to do if or bankrupt the road, and so their action will, if obstinately persisted in in the direction they have outlined, only be a temporary detriment to Portland.

Portland.
Schooled by affliction, any one controlling the O. R. & N. Co.'s line will eventually understand it to be a cardinal proposition that grain freights to the occan must at least be as cheap as that by any other line to obtain to as cheap as that by any other line business. So the schedule of towage is conserved, it is much higher than the rates in vogue when the Portland Tug Company and Capt. Fluvel fixed terms several years sego and I feel confident if a monopoly of the business such as the O. R. & N. Co. are interested to the confident of the business such as the O. R. & N. Co. are interested to the confident of the business of the confident in the first of the Co. and the confident of the Co. Interested in Portland's welfage as I are I the list of the O. R. & N. Co.

Interested in Portland's welfare as Lam. I do not feel at ease to read the sugar-coated apology for the list even if coupled with sunction from the resident managers of the principal shipping houses, who mostly have but little concern for our commercial interests, as it makes no difference to them, whether shipments are made from here or Prigst sound.

The trestle work will be pushed also right along.

RUNDES CONCERNING TERMIKAL WORKS

There are several conflicting reports with regard to the terminal works in Albina. It was stated yesterday that the contract for building the 400 freight cars mentioned some time ago had been awarded to an Eastern firm. This report, however, was denied by equally as good authority. The gentlaman who denied the first report stated that the contract referred to has not been let to any firm as yot, and that there was still good prospects that the work will be done in the shops at this point. Another report was to There are several conflicting reports with prospects that the work will be done in the shops at this point. Another report was lot the effect that a syndicate was to be organized for the burpose of leasing and operating the shops on a general plan. But these are mere reports and are given for what they are worth. It is hoped that the time for operating the shops will not be long delayed. It seems incredible that the vast capital invested in the works will remain unemployed indefinitely.

No man, however good-natured, cares to have a gun or pistol pointed at him, even if it is a wooden gun. Dodson found this fact out yesterday in a way that he will not soon forget. He got hold of an old ruisty pistol, from which the cylinder had been removed, and went down to the stables of Smith & Metcalf. He saw Mr. Hughes sitting in the office. Now everybody knows Hughes, His name can be found on all the hotel registers in the city, as arriving from all over the world at the same time. So Dodson stepped into the office and up to Hughes with a serious look on his face. As he did so, he remarked: "Young man, I have had enough for your nonsense," and pulling out his pistol he pointed it directly at Hughes. In a flash Hughes struck Dodson a lick over the head with his crutch that would have knocked a mule down, and before Dodson could get out of reach, he got in several blows. He showed Hughes he pistol, but nothing could pacify the latter, and Dodson went away with a Sorer, if not wiser, head that way with a Sorer, if not wiser, head that when he tackled Hughes.

The weather still continues rainy and the grass; and grain is growing finely, but we have had plouty of moisture now, so that all crops will mature without any more rain, and we are anxious for fine weather.

The woolen mills had fully intended to shut down last Saturday to clean out the ditch, but owing to so much water in the crock, they keep running right along, and no one can say now when they will stop.

Moyer Bros. have been trying to get some logs down the creek the past week, but have not succeeded in getting many into their boom, owing to lack of water. This has been a poor spring for logging on the Calipsois.

poenia poor spring to be a meeting here of the J. H. Shater Turfff Reform Club, held in the interest of free trade, to be addressed by local speakers. It is claimed by the members of this club that tariff reform is not fully understood by the masses, but we should think that the verdict of the people given two short weeks ago in this state ought or convince even the dullest members of this club that the subject is rightly understood. MINING NOTES,

MINING NOTES,

Work is to be resumed on the "Lucky Boy" in a few days. Adams, Hagan & Co. had two assays made last week, and are quite jubilant over the result.

last week, and are quite jubilant over the result.

Messrs. Waters & Blanchard are soon going to commence work on the Emma mine, in the galena bett on the McKenzie.

Mr. Wm. Bobe departed for the gald belt on the head of Calipooia last week. Messrs. Young and Kemisson arpect to start for the mines to-day.

Mr. J. Ribelin of Halsey has just gone up to the same district to commence operations again on the Golden Eagie mine. Quite a number of miners intend to start from here as snon as the weather becomes settled.

The Crossus Company of Eugene, situated on Treasure hill, in the gold belt, are taking out fine ore, and contemplate putting in a mill this summer. A good custom mill could have all the ore they could work on Quartic creek, in the gold belt, as there are nearly a dozen claims in a radius of a mile or less, that have plenty of paying ore—free milling rock—in eight, and nothing but the lack of reduction works are keeping them from work now. Wood apd water is abintant and these claims are only about six miling rock—in eight, and nothing but the lack of reduction works are keeping them from work now. Wood and water is abundant, and these claims are only about six miles from the McKepzie wagon road.

The interest in the society for imporing song birds from Germany is not abating. Rosebirg and Mediumville are following the example set by St. Helens, and are raising funds to procure some of these birds. Fersors, call at the follice of Secretary i flager and subscribe to the fund quite frequently. The latest is Mr. Geo. E. Good of the Hamk of British Columbia, who contributed $22. He also stated that the detested English sparrow had effected a lodgement here, which will be a very disagreeable piece of news thanny. As was stated in these columns some time since, a person on his return from a vieit East brought three of these fille peaks here and turned them loose. This was about three years ago, and he supposed, and it was fondly hoped, that they had been killed by street gamins or had by some wise dispensation of Providence come to a timely end, as nothing had been seen of them fifter he turned them out. But come to a timely end, as nothing had been seen of them aftite he turned thorn out. But it seems that they dived and prospered, as quite a number of sparrows have been seen of late. The name of the person bringing these birds here is not given, as it would immortalize hum, for as Shakespeare (structly paraphrased) suys, "The name of the fool who fired the Ephesian dome outlives that of the gentleman who reared it."

The English language lacks words to express the harred and disgust of the American people for the "plasted British sparrow." Still the bird has some good points and some friends. A gentleman when informed 'genterday that the horried sparrows had come, and they always come to stay, said he was glad of it, as they were great birds for destroying harmilul insects and worms. This is the object for which they were lived in ported, but many soon concluded that the worms were the lesser infliction.

It is quite certain that the city has there, and the only hope or consolation in regard to this is that, as the sparrows are good to eat, our epicures may take a fancy to them on toats, in which case there is a chance of their being exterminated.

--- De City is Dev Ries and City

The cities of Portland and Albina are one-made so by business, trade and commerce; connected by bridges and united by a common interest. The highlands around Albina are sites that are in or around Portland, due to drainage, ventilation and view. It is practically the head of navigation, and the terminus of the railway system of the northwest.
